Lost recordings:

In 1995 Steeleye recorded "The Golden Vanity" for the "Time" album, but it did not appear on it. It was released on the anthology "The Best of British Folk Rock".

Similarly they recorded "General Taylor" for "Ten Man Mop" but the song did not appear on it. It resurfaced on the compilation album "Individually and Collectively" instead. It was also included in another compilation "The Lark in The Morning" (2006), as well as re-issues of "Ten Man Mop".

"Bonny Moorhen" was recorded at the time of the "Parcel of Rogues" session. It appears, however, on the compilation album "Original Masters", and is also packaged as part of "A Parcel of Steeleye Span".

The song "Somewhere in London", recorded for "Back in Line" (1986) was released instead as a B-side single, but returned to its proper place "Back in Line" when the album was reissued in 1991.

"Staring Robin", a song about a man described by Tim Harries as an "Elizabethan psycho", was recorded during the "Bedlam Born" (2000) sessions, but it was left off the final album as it was deemed by Park Records to be too disturbing.

The track "The Holly and the Ivy" was released as the B-side of the "Gaudete" single and did not appear on any album. It was later released on the "Steeleye Span: A rare collection" oddities compilation. Several Steeleye songs have never been recorded for a studio album and have only been made available in their live versions, including several tracks on "Live at Last" and "Tonight's the Night... Live".
