- Frozen Man. [In early November -74, Young went to Quadrafonic, Elliot Mazer's studio in Nashville, to begin the sessions for what was to be his next album, "Homegrown". The song's bleak title set the tone for much of what was to come.]
 - Separate Ways. [The song begins in the middle of a doomy chord; Tim Mulligan lunged for the record button just as Young and the band dove into the song. Levon Helm rattles out a slow counterpoint as Ben Keith spins up a stark, bird-on-the-wire steel solo that has to be one of the loneliest sounds ever recorded. "I won't apologize/The light shone in from your eyes/It isn't gone/And it will soon come back again," sings Young, sounding dead. This was powerful, painfully sad stuff, and it was goodbye.]
 - Love Is a Rose.
 - Love/Art Blues.
 - Homefires. [Throughout December and January, Young recorded both in Nashville and at the ranch, and the songs rolled out hard and fast. Some were stark acoustic performances - 'Love Is a Rose', 'Love/Art Blues', 'Homefires'.]
 - The Old Homestead. [Others were cut with a band: 'The Old Homestead', a weird allegorical tale with allusions to the Horse.]
 - Homegrown. ['Homegrown', a goofy tribute to hemp recorded in a much higher version by the Horse.]
 - We Don't Smoke It. ['We Don't Smoke It', an inebriated blues vamp that would've sounded right at home on "Tonight's the Night".]
 - Vacancy. [And a killer 'Vacancy', featuring Young mangling guitar and harmonica simultaneously.]

- Try. [In 'Try', a faint ray of optimism that perversely followed "Separate Ways" in one running order for the album, Young paid tribute to Carolyn Snodgrass by adapting bits of her lingo into verse: "I'd like to take a chance," yelps Young over a rollicking piano, "but shit, Mary, I can't dance."]
 - Give Me Strength. [On December 16, Young recorded the totem song of the period, 'Give Me Strength'. The lyrics catch him struggling to make the final break from Carrie's web. The bittersweet chorus is Young at his best: "The happier you fly, the sadder you crawl/The laughter in your eye is never all." Nonsinger Ellen Talbot yowled along on harmony, providing a crazy edge more than suitable for one of the last Carrie songs. The sound is almost mystical. Guitar and harmonica, plus luminous overdubs of a tinkling piano and a finger tapping a paper cup, add glimmers of color that come and go. An impressionistic sound, precisely constructed without losing any of its spontaneous feel.]
 - Kansas.
 - Mexico.
 - Florida. [Towards the end of January 1975, Young and Ben Keith headed to Village Recorders in Los Angeles for the final Homegrown sessions, and the results were way, way out. 'Kansas' and 'Mexico' were solo Young performances - short, fragmentary and hallucinogenic. 'Mexico' was reminiscent of Brian Wilson at his ethereal best. 'Florida' was some cockamamie spoken-word dream (printed out, for reasons no one can remember, in the booklet for Tonight's the Night), set to the shrieking accompaniment of either Young or Keith drawing a wet finger around the rim of a glass.]
 - White Line. [A bittersweet song that Young had recorded as an acoustic duet with The Band's Robbie Robertson in England a few days before CSNY's Wembley show.]
 - Star of Bethlehem.
 - Little Wing.
 - Pardon My Heart.
 - Deep Forbidden Lake.
 - Daughters.
 - Barefoot Floors.
 - Bad News. [Both 'Try' and 'Star of Bethlehem' would benefit greatly from the overdubbed harmonies of Emmylou Harris, who recalls a few details of the blurry session: "It was me, Ben Keith, Neil and a bottle of tequila."]
